Close Reading

Teacher Checklist

10 ways to make close reading simple and meaningful in your classroom

- ☐ Choose high interest text so that students remain engaged with each reading.
- ☐ Give a purpose for each reading. When students have a purpose for reading, it will not seem repetitive.
- ☐ Make the length of the text manageable. Text that is too long can seem overwhelming for students but text that is too short will not allow for deep thinking.
- ☐ Also make the length of the response pages manageable. Students should be able to complete the reading and response in one given time period.
- ☐ Have tools accessible to use for close reading. Have students use annotating bookmarks or sticky notes. Providing tools will make close reading interesting while keeping the purpose within their focus.
- ☐ Model how close reading is different than simply re-reading the text.
- ☐ Give students the opportunity to discuss the text and the reading

"This is such an awesome product! I have been trying to teach my students how to use close reading skills and I've been struggling with how to introduce a text and explain that we will read the same text three times without having them revolt on me! I think this makes things a lot clearer for them and for me! I can't wait to pair it with your monthly close reading passages! So glad I found your products!"

I have a ton of close reading resources but was never sure how to introduce it to my students and to help them maintain good close reading routines, so I was super excited when I saw this resource. Everything in it is perfect. I love the posters and the bookmarks, but my favorite is the close reading flipbook. This will be a great addition to our small group reading time and really help my students stay on-track and focused. Thank you so much!
